THIS MODERN WORLD

DANCING WITH DANGER

I have been wanting to write this for years, yet didn't know exactly where to send it. I am concerned about the lack of rules and regulations of Oregon Liquor Control Commission (OLCC) in the past 10 years.

I was a stripper in Eugene and Springfield between 1997 and 2007. I always felt somewhat safe that there were rules upheld by OLCC in all the strip clubs. I honestly have to say that I am appalled and concerned by the lack of regulation of laws now at all clubs.

I am embarrassed and feel worried for the safety of the entertainers and patrons of these businesses. It is now a live sex show and prostitution runs freely amongst bar owners and the eyes of OLCC. I am disappointed and dumbfounded by this fact.

Where are you OLCC? Who is letting this go on? Even as a fully clothed customer, I have had my crotch and breasts grabbed. I fear for the safety of all the dancers as well as the future of OLCC if they are allowing this activity to occur on a daily basis.

PREVENTING SUICIDE

On June 10 I will be traveling to Washington, D.C. along with more than 225 American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (AFSP) advocates from all 50 states to meet with our congressmen and senators, urging them to support suicide prevention and mental health legislation.

Together we are standing up, speaking out and seeking improvements in five key areas that would play a vital role in preventing suicide and improving mental health across the country: increased funding for suicide prevention research; insurance coverage for mental health and substance use conditions; military and veteran suicide prevention; preservation of funding for suicide prevention programs; and increased funding for the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline (800-273-TALK) and Crisis Centers.

I lost my father and brother to suicide, and I live with bipolar disorder, so this cause is very personal for me.

I have dedicated my time to educating others about suicide prevention and mental health. In meeting with members of Congress, it's our collective goal to effect real change in our government and further our mission to stop suicide.

Let's make mental health as important as physical health and continue to bring hope to those affected by suicide.

END CHILD MARRIAGE

Between 2000 and 2015, at least 207,468 children were married in the U.S., and 3,285 or more of those cases were in Oregon and mostly involved girls married to adult men.

Recently, Delaware became the first and only state to outlaw all marriage under the age of 18. In all other U.S. states, minors can marry through legal loopholes, and often there is no minimum age for marriage.

In Oregon, 17-year-olds can marry with parental consent. This law fails to address the fact that when a child is forced to marry, the perpetrators are almost always the parents.

All child marriage should be eliminated in Oregon. This issue is not about emotional maturity, but rather legal capacity. Minors under 18 lack the legal rights to safely navigate a marriage. They cannot easily enter a domestic violence shelter, retain an attorney or file a legal action in their own name.

The law requires that youth shelters inform parents of the whereabouts of their children, which puts victims in danger if their parents are complicit in the abuse. Child Protective Services will often not intervene in child marriages if the parents consent to the marriage.

Child marriage can also have devastating effects on health, education and economic opportunities.

As a group of high school juniors and seniors, we urge our legislators to end child marriage in Oregon. It is a threat to the safety and freedom of our peers.

It's The Yurts

A SMALL BUSINESS WITH LARGE EFFECTS

Mary and I are at Treebones Resort, perched on the western slopes of the Santa Lucia Mountains, at the end of the road on the Big Sur coast. About a year ago, the largest slide ever on the Big Sur coast closed the coast highway a mile south of here, turning the highway into a gorgeous 70-mile long, dead-end road.

We arrived just ahead of the storm we had been dancing with all down the coast. It rained hard for the rest of the afternoon and into the night. The Santa Lucia Mountains would get over seven inches of rain that night, with wind gusts up to 50 mph. All the while, we were warm, dry and comfortable in our yurt, a little piece of Oregon on the Big Sur coast.

Not long after the Handy family purchased their land at Big Sur, they started looking for a unique lodging experience for their resort. The Handys wanted the lightest possible touch on the land. On a trip to Oregon in 1998 John Handy discovered Pacific Yurts in Cottage Grove.

Handy purchased one yurt and took it back to Big Sur. He and his wife, Corinne, lived in it, testing it for lodging potential. They liked it. In 2003 the Handys placed an order for 15 yurts, and Treebones Resort was born. They purchased more the following year. So now, our refuge from the storm here at Treebones was a Pacific Yurt made in Cottage Grove.

After dinner, a fire blazed in the lodge's stone fireplace as guests played board games. Outside, the storm raged. We learned there had been more slides to the north, and the highway was now closed in that direction as well. We were not going anywhere. We were stranded until they reopened the highway. It was a scene right out of a murder mystery movie. Luckily, we had our cozy yurt to comfortably wait out the reopening of the road.

Alan Bair was a Hoedad tree planter in Cottage Grove in the mid 1970s. He was looking for a structure to function as a home base for the tree planting crew when he saw a photo of a yurt in National Geographic. He was intrigued by the design and built one for the tree-planting camp. It worked so well that he later moved it to land he and his wife, Elizabeth, had purchased near Cottage Grove, to live in.

While they lived in the yurt, people asked Bair if he would build yurts for them. So, in 1978, he started Pacific Yurts in an old dairy barn in Creswell, moving the business to a former skating rink on Highway 99, north of Cottage Grove, in 1980. For the first decade or so, they mostly made yurts for the local Oregon market. Bair says, "It was amazing to me what fertile ground Oregon was for our young enterprise and the outdoor lifestyle it represented."

He took classes in small business management. He met with Gov. Barbara Roberts who, at that time, was looking for ways to boost value-added wood products manufacturing. Pacific Yurts fit the bill, and so got a low-interest loan from the state's new economic development department.

The game-changer came in 1993 when Greg Tutor, Northwest regional manager for Oregon State Parks, visited the Pacific Yurt display at the Oregon State Fair. State Parks was in a funding crisis at the time and needed a way to be more self-sufficient. Tutor thought yurts could generate revenue with yurt rental fees and an extended camping season. And they did.

In 1993 State Parks ordered two 14-foot diameter yurts for Cape Lookout State Park. The yurts were installed in January of 1994 and, with just word-of-mouth advertising, the two little rentals steadily gained in popularity and started making money for the park. State Parks ordered 14 more yurts that year.

Today there are more than 200 Pacific Yurts in Oregon state parks, as well as in state parks in over 20 other states. The original two yurts at Cape Lookout are still in use. Pacific Yurts continues to employ people at family-wage jobs to manufacture their state-of-the-art yurts for Treebones, and the world, right here in Lane County.

On the second day of our trip, the storm eased up, allowing us to get outside. We set cruise control at 30 and drove down the Big Sur coast, never needing to pull over. It's what happens when you are at the end of the road. Humpback whales breached just offshore and sea otters floated on their backs in the surf. California condors soared over the Santa Lucias. And, the next day, the rockslide to the north was clear.

Yes, Treebones is a special place. It would be special just for where it is looking out over the sea at the south end of the Big Sur coast. It's special because it is owned and operated by the Handy family. The Handys and their staff operate it as responsibly as possible, as if it were their home, which it is. But there is something else that makes the place special. It's the yurts. It's very much the yurts.

Bob Warren retired in 2012 as the regional business development officer for Business Oregon for Lane, Lincoln, Linn and Benton counties. Prior to that, he was a senior policy advisor to Gov. Barbara Roberts and district aide and natural resource advisor for Rep. Peter DeFazio.

PREPARATION IS UNDERWAY FOR HAYWARD FIELD'S JUNE 11 DEMOLITION

HAYWARD FIELD PROTESTER ARRESTED, DEMOLITION PROCEEDS AT HISTORIC SITE

East Grandstand supporters struggle to keep stadium alive

The wheels have been set in motion for the demolition of Hayward Field and the construction of a new facility, but historic Hayward Field and East Grandstand supporters are still trying to stop it — including a protester who was arrested after running around the track wearing a “Save Hayward” T-shirt.

Construction of Hayward Field is slated to begin June 19, according to the UO’s “Around the O” news website, but workers were spotted taking up wooden boards from Hayward’s East Grandstand on Monday, June 11, to begin the “inventory process, site preparation and some preliminary salvage work this week,” the site said.

As it stands now, Hayward hosted its final NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championship last week, June 6-9.

On Friday, June 8, local videographer Tim Lewis ran onto Hayward’s track during the meet, wearing a T-shirt that said “Save Hayward” and holding up another that said “Pre Lives For Now.”

The back of the “Save Hayward” shirt Lewis was wearing said, “Hallowed Grounds.”

Lewis was at the championship meet as a spectator. “I had tickets. I didn’t just bust in,” he says. He had made the T-shirts beforehand, he says, but wasn’t fully sure what he wanted to do.

Lewis says he grew up watching Steve Prefontaine run at Hayward Field. “He was my hero,” he says. Lewis says he also was a distance runner at North Eugene High School who spent a lot of time at Hayward Field himself.

He was sitting in the East Grandstand on Friday, the third day of the NCAA Championship, watching the races. After the 5,000-meter race, which he says was Prefontaine’s favorite, Lewis says, he decided to slip off the East Grandstand and onto the track.

He walked back and forth in front of the grandstand with people in the stands cheering him on.

Then, he says, “I decided, ‘Fuck it. I’m going to run around the track to the finish line.”

Lewis then ran around the track, continuing to get cheers from onlookers and even ending up on the big screen. He ran into “10 to 15 security people” near the finish line, he says, but dodged around them to get past. He then exited the gates.

There he ran into two UO police officers he describes as “a little pushy.”

Lewis was arrested on the misdemeanor charges of interfering with police, disorderly conduct and criminal trespassing at a sporting event. He spent a day in jail before he was released without being given a reason for the release, he says.

Lewis talked to EW in anticipation of his court appearance on Tuesday, June 12. “I’m pleading not guilty and already have an attorney,” he said.

Jim Watson is a volunteer official at Hayward Field. He says he witnessed Lewis’ run around the track and was standing near Vin Lananna, UO’s associate athletic director, when it happened.

“I work at the finish line on the outside of the track,” Watson says. “I saw this guy, Tim [Lewis], running around on the infield with a T-shirt on.”

“He didn’t seem confrontational,” Watson says. “He seemed like he was having a great time. He was enjoying the attention and sending the message. He went by and went out the gate. Nobody bothered him.”

“When I turned back around I saw Vin Lananna and his face was beet red. He got out his phone and started screaming in it,” he says. “It sounded like he said something like, ‘Get that guy.’”

Watson says he couldn’t hear for sure what Lananna said.

“In my opinion, that reaction to arrest him indicates that they’re worried about protests like that,” Watson says. “I think Tim in a way exposed them from doing something playful like that and them overreacting.”

Liz Carter is a part of the East Grandstand Supporters.

She was at Hayward Field on Monday, June 11, when workers began dismantling the East Grandstand. The East Grandstand Supporters are talking to attorneys, she says.

Carter says she spoke with the Oregon State Historic Preservation Office on Monday morning and confirmed that the UO has not completed the designated process of consultation with the preservation office before beginning construction.

Ian Johnson, associate deputy state historic preservation officer, confirms this, but adds that there are no penalties for not following that process.

“The Oregon Revised Statute 358.653 is a state law without administrative rules,” Johnson says. That law, he says, obligates state agencies and political subdivisions of the state — including UO — to consult with historic preservation in order to avoid any inadvertent impacts to historic properties for which they are responsible.

The UO “is currently in the process of negotiating a memorandum of agreement that states [Hayward Field’s] historic background,” he says.

Though all public entities, including UO, are supposed to comply with that law, there are no “penalties at this time for non-compliance,” the law’s fact sheet states.

Johnson says even though this state law doesn’t hold any penalties, UO still “has to comply with local laws and permits.”

A demolition permit is on file with the city for Hayward Field, so UO is complying with the city.

“Hayward Field and the East Grandstand has a lot of history,” Lewis says. He says Nike founder Phil Knight received a lot of his vision to start Nike from Hayward. “Prefontaine was the first big athlete to wear Nike,” Lewis says.

“You should respect where you came from,” he says. “And Phil Knight isn’t doing that.”

The upcoming demolition and construction of the new facility are “destroying the magic that is Hayward Field,” Lewis says. “There’s not going to be any magic left.” ■

YOUTH VS. CLIMATE CHANGE

Our Children's Trust will have its trial against federal government for its role in climate change

In 2015, 21 young plaintiffs filed a lawsuit against the U.S. government, Juliana vs. U.S., asserting the federal government's culpability in climate change. The trial starts Oct. 29 here in Eugene.

The lawsuit argues that the government's complicity in supporting energy using fossil fuels violates the section of the Fifth Amendment which states that citizens should be free from government actions that "harm life, liberty and property," according to the lawsuit.

Our Children's Trust (OCT), a local nonprofit, is working on the case. Julia Olson, executive director of OCT and a lead counsel in the lawsuit, says OCT and the plaintiffs are "very energized" about having a firm trial date, but there's a lot of work that needs to be done in the meantime. "It's going to be busy," she says.

Olson says she and the plaintiffs are in the midst of preparing for the trial, gathering factual and expert testimony and research for discovery, or evidence, for the trial.

"So, for example, everything that the federal government has done over many decades to create our energy system and the different roles that the different agency defendants have played in creating climate change and locking us into a fossil fuel energy system — putting together that factual story is a really important part of the case," Olson says.

One of the organizations supporting OCT is the Leonardo DiCaprio Foundation. Started by the Oscar-winning actor, the foundation was established "with the mission of protecting the world's last wild places."

Will DiCaprio himself show up in Eugene for the trial?

"I don't know. I haven't had that conversation with them yet," Olson laughs. "I have heard that he is definitely very supportive and excited about the work that we're doing and he's proud to support OCT through his foundation."

She says the trial may offer a chance to engage with other celebrities.

"I think as we get closer to trial we'll be having more conversations with a lot of people from politicians to certain celebrities who can use their networks to get the word out and others who want to come to Eugene and be a presence in part to help focus attention on the case," Olson says.

Olson says the trial will last eight to 10 weeks. It will be held at the Wayne L. Morse federal courthouse and will be

JULIA OLSON,
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF OUR CHILDREN'S TRUST

first-come, first-serve for community members who want to attend.

For those who can't make it, Olson says OCT's communications team is working on projects to publicize the trial.

"The communications team is working on developing a podcast that will start coming out before trial to sort of lead up to the story and then have a weekly episode during trial," she says. "We'll also have a sketch artist in the courtroom drawing pictures each day."

She says, "OCT leads this whole campaign strategy of elevating the voice of young people to secure their rights to a climate system that sustains their life and liberties and giving them access to the third branch of government by representing them in court."

Even those outside of Eugene can participate through solidarity, she says. "There will be rallies in all 50 states on the first day of trial at federal courthouses around the country. And then globally as well there will be rallies of people standing in solidarity with the youth. There's just a ton of stuff happening on the organizing level."

Kelsey Juliana is one of the plaintiffs in the trial. She's from Eugene and is currently a student at UO.

"I'm very ready," Juliana says. "I'm very ready to get to it."

Juliana has had a long history of working for the environment in Eugene and elsewhere. "I have been advocating for action on the climate since I was 10 years old," she says. When she was 15, she first worked with OCT in suing the governor of Oregon over carbon emissions. She also walked across the country with the Great March for Climate Action when she was 18.

"This was the next thing I felt compelled to do," Juliana says.

Juliana encourages Eugeneans to come out to the trial. "We are sitting in front of federal district judges. This case might go to the Supreme Court," she says. "This is an incredible opportunity to be a part of history making." ■

LANE UNITED FANS WORLD CUP PULSE

Local projections for FIFA 2018

Many local soccer fans went to Les Schwab Sports Park in Springfield on Sunday, May 20, to watch Lane United Football Club (Lane United or LUFC) take on Sounders U23 in a competitive Premier Development League Northwest Conference match. I took advantage of the opportunity to survey their sentiments about soccer's (if not sports') most popular tournament, which will be played June 12 through July 15 in Russia: the FIFA World Cup.

I asked fans two questions: First, who do they want to win the World Cup? And, second, who do they think will win the World Cup?

Several fans declined to express any preference or projection, confessing a lack of knowledge of or interest in the World Cup or simply dismissing my inquiry. Some fans named countries, like the U.S., that didn't qualify for the 2018 World Cup — I didn't have the heart or time to tell them about the impossibility of such countries winning a tournament in which they aren't participating. And one fan proclaimed the futility of such questions because the competition has been rigged by Russia.

But more than 100 fans provided the following preferences and projections.

As for preferences, 15 fans want Mexico to win the 2018 World Cup, 13 fans want Brazil, 12 want Germany, 10 for Argentina, eight for Iceland and Spain, seven for Costa Rica, six for England and the U.S., four for Denmark and Egypt, three for France and Holland, two for Belgium, and one fan each for Colombia, Italy, Northern Ireland, Panama, Peru, Portugal and Uruguay.

As for projections, 55 fans think Germany will win the soccer World Cup, 18 think Brazil will win it, 13 think Spain will, nine think France, three think Argentina and the U.S., two think England and one projection each for Belgium, Colombia, Holland, Iceland, Italy and Mexico.

If you can't travel to Moscow for soccer, Fox Sports will be showing the games and if you prefer your games with shouts of "Gooooooal!" you can stream it via Telemundo.

And regardless of what happens in this year's World Cup, local fans will also have plenty of good soccer to enjoy this summer in Springfield. LUFC will be playing in Springfield again on Friday, June 22, against Victoria (B.C.) Highlanders FC, Sunday, June 24, against Starphire FC, and Friday, June 29, against Timbers U23. Find the LUFC schedule at laneunitedfc.com. ■

SLANT

• A bold MSNBC commentator reminded us during the Singapore meetings between Donald Trump and Kim Jong-un that both leaders are avowed big-time liars. That's a fact, so there is our context for measuring the meeting.

• Fay and Erik de Buhr and Tom Bowerman took home tiny metal turtles engraved with their names from the City Club of Eugene meeting June 8. They were winners of the club's 2018 Turtle Awards primarily "for sticking one's neck out for the good of the community." A 27-year tradition, the Turtle Awards were introduced by John VanLandingham, the first turtle, who identified himself as the "unelected chair of an unelected committee." The de Buhrs, who manage four city-approved camps for homeless, have housed 500 people over five years. "Helping people keeps us going," they say. Tom Bowerman is head of PolicyInteractive that does values research. It directs his work on climate legislation, education and other issues. On climate change, he says, "It is us ... we need to change our way of life." Bowerman also works with Dan Bryant on housing projects. Go, Turtles!

• Rather than reinstate its dog ban that clearly focused on targeting the homeless over safety, the city of Eugene has now put in place a more legitimate rule. To have a canine in the downtown core, a dog owner must "hold a valid dog license that certifies the dog has been vaccinated for rabies, and the license must be attached to a collar or harness." The city pointed out in its press release that the nonprofit group Pro-Bone-O can help the unhoused with that (make donations at proboneo.org). Also, kudos to Eugene for focusing on bringing fun back to downtown with events like human foosball and bringing back the Eugene parade instead of focusing on driving out the homeless. Took them long enough! Is that why the parade theme is "spinning our wheels"?

• Overheard around town about the new plans for Hayward Field: That tall glass tower Phil Knight wanted to name after Bill Bowerman isn't a phallic symbol, as many have called it. It's a giant middle finger.

• Kudos to U.S. Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley, who were named co-recipients of this year's Wayne Morse Integrity in Politics Award from the Wayne Morse Historical Park Corporation Board. "We recognize those who hold public office and demonstrate an extraordinary level of integrity and willingness to take a stand even at considerable political cost," WMHPCB President Johnny Earl said announcing the award on Tuesday, June 12.

• We, like you, were stunned to hear of the suicides of designer Kate Spade and chef Anthony Bourdain. It's not enough to tell those who are suffering from depression that we are there for them, we have to reach out.

• What we're reading: Ruth Downie is a British author best known for her mysteries featuring the "reluctant sleuth," Gaius Petreius Ruso, set in the Roman world. The latest is Memento Mori, published in 2018.

Dead & Co., despite their name, never say die — just like the Goonies. One of many reincarnations of the Grateful Dead features Mickey Hart, Bill Weir and Bill Kreutzmann. A surprising addition in the touring band is John Mayer, who's probably known for his songs "Your Body Is a Wonderland," "Gravity" and his short stint in a skit on the Chappelle's Show. Mayer has received some props from blues musician Keb' Mo', who tells the Eugene Weekly that it was a "pimp move." He adds: "Who'd have thought of that ... I think it's an honest move. He's a real musician. He's not a joke." Not to mention the Dead & Co. will be one of the best things to happen to Autzen Stadium since Marcus Mariota. Dead & Co. play Autzen Stadium 7 pm Saturday, June 30.

Jackson says before Ness saw her perform, she'd been going on stage solo since she was 13. But he encouraged her to get a band behind her and then gave them some homework: listening to Tom Petty's Wildflowers and Car Wheels on a Gravel Road by Lucinda Williams.

"They weren't heavy rock albums, but they were definitely something in the ballpark of what he thought I could potentially accomplish with a band," Jackson says.

It seems the album passed Ness' muster. The band avoids the musical tropes often found in country. The album's opening song, "Aden," mixes twangy guitars and fiddle to accompany Jackson's raspy voice. And, oddly enough, Jackson's voice does seem like a mix of Tom Petty and Lucinda Williams. Her band proves to have the attitude necessary to fit the profile of something like outlaw country. The outro guitar solo of "Good Time Gone," for example, is dirty enough to make it in a Social Distortion song.

12th Annual Whiteaker Block Party features some of Eugene's hardest working bands, including And And And. They released their second album, Idiot, in February 2018. During the album, the band throws together unorthodox chord construction and melodies, distinctive vocal styles and explosive dynamics. The result of the chaos is a product that could rival The Pixies in their heyday.

The abrasion coupled with catchy melodies is what Nathan Baumgartner (guitar and vocals) of the band works toward.

"When I set out to write a song, I'm mostly interested in melody," he says. "I always try to create long melodic phrases with an ear-wormy quality. Then I search for the chords to fit it."

Once it comes to band arrangement, everyone gets a chop at it. Baumgartner adds that they all come up with rhythms and countermelodies. The result is apparent in Idiot. Just listen to "Windows for the Blind," which captures the band's knack for writing songs avoiding comfortable chord progression resolution while featuring a memorable melody. It also shows their multi-rhythmic parts in their songs — including fill-heavy drums.

The band has the album to stream on their website (andandandmusic.com) as a way to provide it to listeners without subjecting it to online companies that rely on ad revenue of user data — like Spotify, Apple Music and YouTube. It's a way for the band to due their part on re-establishing the internet for art again and not allow capitalists to continue their exploitation of a public good — which is becoming a modern tragedy of the commons — Bim Ditson (drums) says.

Tickets for Eugene Symphony's Summer Concert are available for free through the Hult Center while supplies last. Or tickets can be purchased for $2 by phone at 541-682-5000 or $2.50 online. TajMo: The Taj Mahal & Keb' Mo' Band performs with Alicia Michilli at the Cuthbert Amphitheater 7 pm Friday, July 27, tickets are $35-$149. Jade Jackson plays Hi-Fi at 9 pm Thursday, July 12 advance tickets are $10, at the door $12. And And And plays the main stage at 8 pm at the 12th Annual Whiteaker Block Party, FREE.

Everything I know in life is thanks to The Simpsons. Homer taught me that when you get a job, summer vacations become a thing of the past. But working during summer doesn't mean you can't have fun. Eugene luckily has a list of great musical performances without breaking the bank.

Right now, Eugene Symphony Orchestra has Francesco Lecce-Chong — the closest thing to matching the rock star vibes that Leonard Bernstein brought to the classical music world in the 1950s. If you haven't had the chance to see him take the podium and baton, he'll lead the orchestra for their 10th annual free summer concert.

The program (subject to change) features Bernstein's "Candide Overture," as a way to whet the appetite for the upcoming season that will have Bernstein headlining. In addition to Strauss marches, the program includes Gershwin's "Selections from Porgy and Bess" and Tchaikovsky's loud and inspiring "1812 Overture." Of course, during the program expect Lecce-Chong to trade in the baton for an elegant weapon from a more civilized time when they perform the "Star Wars: Force Awakens Suite, Jedi Steps and Credits."

TajMo, a collaboration between blues legend Taj

Mahal and Keb' Mo', returns to Eugene for a second performance in Eugene.

Keb' Mo' says that he saw Taj Mahal in the late 1960s while he was in high school, and it was an inspiration in terms of seeing someone reimagine the blues.

"All you had before was the blues your parents listened to — B.B. King, T Bone Walker," he says. "And out walks this black hippy dude with a big hat and a steel guitar."

He adds that he still gets a little star struck being on the same stage as Taj Mahal but recording the TajMo album went over "smooth like butter." And it's received quite a bit of acclaim, which he adds he didn't expect would happen. The album won a Grammy and two awards — Best Album and Best Contemporary Album — from the Blues Foundation.

When building the set list, he says he asked himself what would he want to hear if he were at a Taj Mahal show. The show features the album, which includes a cover of John Mayer's "Waiting on the World to Change." Keb' Mo' says he added the song to the album because "the song had teeth."

Country music has its fair share of clichés: tractors, trucks and heartbreak. But Jade Jackson brings fresh air to the genre. Her debut album, Gilded, was produced by Mike Ness, the front man of Social Distortion.

BIKE SHARING SERVICE COMES TO EUGENE
IN TIME FOR SUMMER by Will Kennedy

The blue bikes seemed to appear overnight, scattered around the central core of Eugene.

But Lindsey Hayward, general manager of PeaceHealth Rides, a new local bike share system, says plans to bring the program to town were years in the making.

The idea came from the University of Oregon, she says. Soon LTD and the city of Eugene were on board, and eventually PeaceHealth Medical Group signed on as the title sponsor.

"Eugene is really built for bike share," she says, and the program has been wildly successful, with ridership outpacing expectations.

Hayward says bike sharing effectively connects campus to downtown, as well as helping to alleviate parking issues in the Whiteaker Neighborhood.

Ridesharing service Uber recently bought Jump Bikes, the hardware and software provider for the service. Hayward says one day, riders could be able to find a driver or a bike all in the same app.

For the PeaceHealth bikes, riders sign up online. $5 a month gets 60 minutes a day for anyone with a UO email address. $15 a month gets an hour a day for non-UO affiliated riders.

"This is just phase one," Hayward says, adding there's talk of expanding the service north of the river and to Springfield. A recent press release from PeaceHealth says that the program has 3,747 active members who have taken 20,701 trips, logging a total of 27,726 miles.

Hubs can be found and bikes reserved via an app downloadable to any mobile device. However, with a pass-code and personal identification number, bikes that aren't already reserved can always be checked out on the spot.

Any rack, post or pole within the service zone works to lock the bikes up, and bikes can be put on hold, perfect for errands like running to the grocery store. Hold time counts toward allotted daily time, but otherwise, the clock only ticks while actively riding.

PeaceHealth bicycles have eight gears, a basket, and a bell and are much lighter and easier to ride than their deceptively solid metal frame might indicate.

For an extra fee, bikes can be ridden and left outside of the service zone. $1 in riding credit is rewarded as a "bounty" to anyone using the app to locate bikes beyond the zone and returning them to a hub.

While ridesharing services like Uber and Lyft, green lit by the city, are expected to arrive at any time, summer in Eugene is perfect for participating in a different kind of ride sharing service, what Hayward calls "an active transportation system."

So whether for fun or business, it's never been easier to take two wheels instead of four.

Summer Guide

The best thing golf ever did was to inspire the creation of disc golf. If you love playing disc golf, you can put it to use for charity by registering for Disc Golf With CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocates). Attendees can play a fun tournament that will benefit the nonprofit that works to provide a voice for abused and neglected children in Lane County by working with the courts and child protective services to find safe, permanent homes. At the tournament, you can compete in tournaments for prizes — and bragging rights. Tournaments are organized by skill level. For an additional $5, you can also throw with a pro, a way to gain a lot of experience while helping kids. The tournament is followed by food, drink and celebration. Registration fees include a swag bag, disc and food and drink that will follow after your game of either 9 or 18 holes.

Check in starts at 9:30 am and the tournament at 10 am. Disc Golf with CASA is Saturday, June 30, at Westmoreland Disc Golf Course, 1680 W. 18th Avenue. $15-$25. — Henry Houston

Every year, Britt Festival brings in well-known artists, and this year is no different — with a line up that has something for everyone. One highlight is all the works that the Britt Orchestra will showcase, including a celebration of Leonard Bernstein's 100th birthday. Founded in 1963, the orchestra is led by Music Director Teddy Abrams and consists of 90 musicians who come to Rogue Valley just for the Britt Fest. The festival also attracts rock and pop musicians, such as Ann Wilson of Heart, alternative rock legends Primus with Mastodon and Portugal. The Man. Rising star Father John Misty, who performs July 20, just released his newest — and fourth — album God's Favorite Customer. Britt Festival, located at 350 First Street, Jacksonville, takes over summer. Performances started June 12 and run until Sept. 14. Maybe you've seen a huge parade, but what about The Eug Parade? The parade starts with the Pet Promenade — a procession of humans and their pet overlords celebrating their right to be in downtown Eugene — at Monroe Park at 10 am and disperses at Broadway and Charnelton. The human side of the parade will have a theme called "Spinnin' Our Wheels," off which entries will base their costumes if they want to take home prizes. However, all entries must be non-motorized and human powered — so if you're doing something related to Pixar's Cars franchise, you'll have to rethink your entry. But creativity has its rewards. "Best of" winners get $100. Parade categories are: marching units, special features, unique non-motorized vehicles, animal units and musical bands. All entries must be received by Friday, July 13.

Not interested in attending the parade? Keep in mind there will be street closures. The Eugene Parade begins at the Park Blocks (8th Avenue and Oak Street) 10am Sunday, July 29. FREE. — Henry Houston

Name a better trio than sun, fair food and live entertainment. The Lane County Fair will certainly bring two of those this year. Fairgoers can expect classic fair foods — barbecue, elephant ears and ice cream — as well as thrill rides and the always-adorable pig races. The 2018 Lane County Fair Concert Series will end each night with entertainment of yesteryear. Night Ranger wrote “(You Can Still) Rock in America” as a reminder that we could still rock during the 1980s. The jury is still out whether we can rock in Trump’s America. Funnyman Bill Engvall, the guy who likes to give people their sign, will bring his well-loved jokes to the stage. The series also includes Melissa Etheridge, High Valley and Trace Adkins. The only thing that grows more than Oregon grass is the amount of festival celebration during summer. For just a few dollars at admission, you can have access to a full day of entertainment, unique food and arts and crafts. The 58th Annual Scandinavian Festival in Junction City is a way to introduce people to the cultures of the Northern European people. The festival does so by dedicating each day to a different nationality: Thursday is Norwegian Day, Friday is Swedish Day, Saturday is Danish Day and Sunday is Finnish Day. The festival will feature three stages of entertainment, including folk dancers, demonstrations and music. Best of all, the festival will have food from Scandinavian countries, especially for those who have a hankering for æbleskivers (pancake puffs) or lutefisk. The 58th Annual Scandinavian Festival will be held in downtown Junction City at 6th and Greenwood and runs 10 am to 10 pm Thursday, Aug. 9, through Saturday, Aug. 11, and 10 am to 8pm on Sunday, Aug. 12. — Henry Houston

Picture yourself sitting on a patio listening to some of the finest jazz music in Oregon as the wind sweeps some of the McKenzie River coolness across your face on a warm, summer day. Roaring Rapids Pizza Company is making this a reality with the 2018 Roaring Rapids Pizza Company Summer Music Fest. The summer concert series will invite musicians from the Eugene-Springfield area and Portland to their riverside patio to showcase music in an accessible and relaxed environment. Musical groups Jessie Smith's Big Band, a collection of Northwest jazz musicians, who play their own big band music led by local alto sax player Jessika Smith. The Portland Jazz Composers Ensemble, consisting of nine seasoned musicians, will take over the patio, as well as Roger Woods' Octet, which will feature longtime Eugene saxophonist and writer and arranger Roger Woods with seven all-star friends. Roaring Rapids Pizza Company's Summer Music Fest runs Tuesday, July 10, through Thursday, Aug. 30. Roaring Rapids is located at 4006 Franklin Boulevard. The SLUG queen competition is a Eugene summer staple, happening every year since 1983. As the season draws near, the next batch of potential SLUG (Society for the Legitimization of the Ubiquitous Gastropod) queens should start to prepare for the August pageant and decide what they'll do if they get to reign — excuse me, the preferred spelling is actually “RAIN” — over Eugene as our unofficial leader.

Debbie Williamson, who rained over Eugene in 2011-2012 as Queen Holly GoSlugly (each queen picks a slug-themed nickname) says the role of the SLUG queen is flexible. “You get to attend all of Eugene’s events with a crown on your head,” she says. “You can do as little or as much as you want.”

But there is a charitable component, too. While there aren’t a lot of “official” rules associated with the SLUG queen’s rain, it is recommended that the queens, who can be of any gender, choose a nonprofit to raise awareness and money for. This makes the queen more than what seems on the surface to be a silly tradition.

Being a SLUG queen is a lifetime job. When you’ve given up the throne to a new queen, your title becomes “old queen.”

“Once a queen, always a queen,” Constance Van Flandern, also known as Queen Marie Slugtoinette from 2008-2009, says. “You’re never a former or a past queen.” The old queens have a large part in the competition, judging the potential new queens. Hopeful queens are advised to creatively buy off the old queens for votes, though it’s not exactly as nefarious as it sounds.

“We encourage the contestants to bribe early, bribe often,” Williamson says. “People get confused about that, and it sounds really greedy. I can’t speak for the other 34 queens, but the best bribe I can get is to see people out and about.”

She means that if you want to be a SLUG queen, you should show up at community-based events and try to get the old queens’ attention.

The slimy slug is ubiquitous around in the Willamette Valley, and the SLUG queen competition aims to connect Eugene to the essence of the often-dissed gastropod. “It’s a cultural celebration that really celebrates our identity as being unique and being aware of our quirkiness, it has a sense of humor,” Van Flandern says.

This year, incumbent Queen Santa Frida Babosita will throw an event, “Meet Me at the Zocalo!” shortly before the end of her rain in August as a send-off and a celebration of Latinx culture. It will be at the Park Blocks, on 8th Avenue and Oak Street. The competition for the 2018-2019 SLUG Queen will be on the Friday of that week.

The main goal of the SLUG Queen is to connect Eugeneans.

“Everyone can identify with this fun character, and we can bring people together in a way that an actual political figure may not be able to do,” Van Flandern says.

The 2018 SLUG Queen competition is Friday, Aug. 10 at the Park Blocks. More information can be found at slugqueen.com.

Summer Guide

Summer is a wonderful time in Eugene for many reasons. A big one is the abundance of fresh local fruit available. Instead of stealing blackberries off of your neighbors' bushes, check out local farms in the area offering u-pick opportunities. Along with being able to buy already farmed produce from markets within farms, u-pick let's you go out into the field and collect your own. Some u-pick options include strawberries, apples and peaches. Some farms also offer u-pick flowers so you can create your own bouquets for loved ones. A few farms in the area offering u-pick are Detering Orchards, in Harrisburg, Ambrosia Farm, in Veneta, and Lone Pine Farms, in Junction City — and a ton more. Make sure to contact farms ahead of time to confirm what u-pick options they are currently offering, as offerings change throughout the season. — Meerah Powell

This year's Pickathon Music Festival features a diverse lineup that includes Tinariwen, Broken Social Scene, Shakey Graves, Sunflower Bean, Joshua Hedley and Built To Spill. Tinariwen, a band whose homeland, which is located between northeastern Mali and southern Algeria and has become a conflict zone, are on tour supporting their new album, Elwan. Their music combines gritty guitar sounds and polyrhythmic percussive beats. The group says they are guitar poets and soul rebels from the southern Sahara armed with guitars. Now that's rock 'n' roll. The festival also features The Blind Boys of Alabama, who have been around since the late 1930s and toured throughout the South during the Jim Crow era. Both of these groups will fill the weekend with rebel and soul music. Pickathon Music Festival runs from Aug. 3-5, in Happy Valley. Getting There

Ride the bus to the Fair for FREE with your OCF ticket from anywhere in the Lane Transit District system (LTD). Shuttle buses depart downtown Eugene and Valley River Center. LTD schedules are available at ltd.org or 541.687.5555.

Camping

For neighborhood camping information, visit oregoncountryfair.org and click on Visitor Information for a full list of nearby campgrounds. There is no public camping on the Fair site.

Child's Play

The whole Fair is a magical playground for kids of all ages but when you need a break, child care is available and provides fun and stimulating activities for our young Fair-goers, including face painting, live entertainment, and crafts!

Alter-Abled

4A promotes equal access for all Fair-goers. Find them in the dragon's head at the Fair entrance to help support your Fair experience.

Food, Glorious Food

Amazing food options for all at the over 80 food booths and strolling food vendors located throughout the Fair. A variety of food from around the world and traditional favorites will make your whole troop happy from head to toe. Enjoy!

Creative Brilliance

Art is the essence of the Fair and only hand-made art sold directly to you by the crafter is featured. No imports here! With over 800 artisan vendors you'll find a vast array of items from one-of-a-kind clothing, jewelry and fashion, to expertly crafted home items, musical instruments, furniture and art galore. Massage and bodywork, spiritual and contemplative items—we guarantee you'll find something you love!

The Bigger Picture

The Oregon Country Fair has donated more than $1 million to local non-profits over just the last 2 decades! It's truly rooted in philanthropy with the intention of building community and helping it thrive. Learn more about OCF grant making programs and more at the Galleria Philanthropia booth.

We owe our obsession with 4th of July celebrations to John Adams, who, in his letters to his wife, excitedly said generations after theirs would celebrate the day. Of course, we've ignored most of his other writings, but, hell, you only get to blow stuff up once a year. And the Eugene-Springfield area has you covered. Start the day off with the 2018 Aquafina Butte to Butte. For just $35 (which includes a T-shirt) you can enjoy the freedom of a 6.26-mile closed course that runs from Spencer Butte to Skinner Butte. There's nothing more American than a rodeo. After your run, ditch those running shoes for some cowboy boots and watch some of the best buck around with a bull at the Eugene Pro Rodeo (90751 Prairie Road), which runs July 3, 4, 6, 7. The rodeo will have some fireworks, but if you want your celebrations to include donations, head over to the Springfield Utility Board's Light of Liberty Celebration at Island Park (200 W. B Street), a fundraiser for Project Share. The event will have you singing along to "American Woman" since The Guess Who will take the stage with Jimmy Bobby Band opening — and it's all for just $5 in advance, $8 at the door. The Eugene Symphonic Band will take over the Washburne Park (E. 21st Street and Agate Street) concert series with bring some new and orchestral classics. If you're more of an art and fireworks kind of person, 2018 Art and Vineyard Festival will take over Alton Baker Park from 4 pm until fireworks light up the sky. The festival is presented by Maude Kerns Art Center and the Active 20-30 Club of Eugene and will run July 6 to July 8. — Henry Houston

Music festivals often require a lot of running around to catch the bands you want to see, finding time to go to the bathroom and sitting through bands you don't really care about. Beloved Festival is different. It's a four-day experience that brings sacredness back into music. Organizers of the festival take a lot of care in curating the line up. In the past, musical artists have varied on the global spectrum from Portland Taiko to West African desert blues to Yemeni indie rock. And the artists perform on just one stage to ensure audience can remained focused on the music and have a unifying experience. Other activities include dancing, art, workshops, yoga and expanding your mind. Beloved Music Festival is located at Tidewater Falls in an Oregon coastal forest venue and the festival runs from Thursday, Aug. 9 to Sunday, Aug. 12. — Henry Houston

If you love music festivals but detest all the camping in middle-of-nowhere places, Bumbershoot has you covered. Bumbershoot's name is a reference to Seattle's weather, as well as being a one-stop, multi-arts festival. This year, the three-day festival includes, among many other artists, J. Cole, The Chainsmokers, Phoenix and Blondie, making this year's line-up a deviation from other festivals. In addition to music, comedians and podcasters will take the stage. Visual arts events include a laser show at the Laser Dome of the Pacific Science Center. The dome theater, 80 feet in diameter, is the largest and longest-operating laser theater in the world, and laser artists will take over the theater — sparing event-goers any clichéd music. Festival attendees can also taste some of the finest culinary creations in the Seattle area.

The festival takes over the Seattle Center, originally created for the 1962 World's Fair, Friday, Aug. 31, through Sunday, Sept. 2, at 305 Harrison Street, Seattle. For more information or to purchase tickets, visit bumbershoot.com

While at the zoo, the only music-related exhibit you'd expect to see is a deaf leopard. But Oregon Zoo is once again mixing things up by bringing their concert series. The Roots are one of the featured artists of the series. Somehow, the band make it possible to not just be the house band for Jimmy Fallon's Tonight Show but also release original music. They haven't released anything recently, but they might have something up their sleeves. They play the zoo 7 pm Saturday, July 21. The series also includes Violent Femmes, Belle and Sebastian, Billy Idol among others. Ticket prices vary, visit oregonzoo.com for more information. — Henry Houston

The 4 Peaks Music Festival started with the intention of putting on a small music festival in someone's backyard and later morphed into a 40-acre party with live music, arts and camping in Central Oregon. It also provides its own Kidlandia so kids can keep themselves entertained. The festival has artists such as: Poor Man's Whiskey, North Mississippi Allstars, Greensky Bluegrass and The New Mastersounds. The festival also features Oregon native Nahko (Medicine for the People), which will truly be medicine for the ears. Nahko was disillusioned by the world around him but inspired by Americana musicians and, like Bob Dylan, armed himself with three chords and the truth. The 4 Peaks Music Festival, located at 21085 Knott Road, Bend, and starts 5 pm Thursday, June 21, and runs to 4 pm Sunday, June 24. For ticket and more information, visit 4peaksmusic.com. — Henry Houston

It's kitten season, so Greenhill Humane Society is hosting a kitten shower.

That means the nonprofit is asking for life saving cat supplies for cats that will be staying at the shelter soon. This includes canned cat food, kitten kibble, snuggle safe microwaveable heating pads, kitten meal replacer and more. The kitten shower will also be an opportunity to see all of the kittens Greenhill has, who are available for adoption — as well as a chance to cuddle with the kittens. The kitten shower runs noon to 3 pm Saturday, June 16, at Greenhill Humane Society, 88530 Green Hill Road. If you want to donate items but can't attend the shower, visit babylist.com/kittens-GreenhillHumaneSociety. FREE.

Birds, Bees, Butterflies, & Blooms Walk, 10am-noon, Mount Pisgah Arboretum,

Art is a way to peer inside another person's soul. So set aside your friendly rivalry with Corvallis and experience what the city has to offer at the Corvallis Arts Walk. Robin Silver is one of the artists whose work is on display. Silver takes bits and pieces to portray a bigger picture. Her artwork at the Majestic Theatre (115 S.W. 2nd Street) includes collages on musical instruments to honor the beauty that music brings into people's lives. Just down the street at Pegasus Gallery (230 S.W. 3rd Street, #201), graduating art students from Oregon State University will highlight some of their favorite works they have completed during their studies. It's also the location of the Corvallis Arts Walk after-hours party, led by DJ Don Jon Demarco. Corvallis Arts Walk starts at 4 pm and runs until 8 pm Thursday, June 21, and is located at downtown Corvallis. — Henry Houston

IT'S A FAMILY AFFAIR

Horrors of domestic strife, inconsolable grief and supernatural evil run rampant in Hereditary

There are a handful of movies I never tire of watching, and one of them is Rosemary's Baby. That film, about the birth of Satan's spawn in a Manhattan apartment, possesses a specific malevolence that, for me, hasn't diminished one bit over the course of its half-century in existence.

Roman Polanski's 1968 masterpiece, only nominally a horror film, is too rich and complex to begin to dissect here, but for my purposes I'd like to mention just one aspect of the strange magnetism it exhibits.

By dropping a longstanding conspiracy of Satanists into the middle of everyday New York in the turbulent '60s — gritty, loud, hectic, mundane — Polanski conjures a sense of authenticity that is at once disorienting and disarming. He makes the work of Satan look distinctly urban and merely ho-hum, carried out by chatty, annoying neighbors who knit and bake chocolate mousse in their spare time.

First-time director Ari Aster achieves a similar effect in Hereditary, a new horror film that rivals Rosemary's Baby in its willingness to combine an elemental evil with the awkward fumbling and fretting of recognizable reality, and to push the logic of its narrative past the brink of madness and into a kind of hysterical epiphany.

At the end of Rosemary's Baby, one of the Satanists gathered for the birth of the Prince of Darkness snaps cheerful photos of the new infant with a Nikon, while others argue about who gets to hold the baby next. It's this absurdist mingling of narcissistic concern and cosmological threat that Hereditary taps into. It dares you to laugh.

At the center of it all is Toni Collette, who delivers a performance of such unhinged force that it upends everything we've come to expect from horror movies. As a woman coping with the recent death of her distant, authoritarian mother, Collette's Annie is the portrait of confused grief; as an artist who creates miniature dioramas of her life, she is at once self-absorbed and controlling, with a martyr's streak a mile wide. Watching distraught Annie react to the rising terror engulfing her, I kept thinking, That's exactly what I would do. Collette's performance, a livewire of astounded incomprehension, breaks down all resistance to disbelief. She is almost too real.

And then her world utterly collapses, plunging her and her family into a living hell that, on its surface, is the timeless stuff of tragedy — and forget about whatever supernatural evil may or may not be lurking beneath the devastated surface. Hereditary, along with its horror tropes, is a shattering tale of loss.

The shocks this film provides are significant and impressive — and rather than being cheap scares, these sudden twists and turns reveal, in the final reckoning, a superstructure of inexorable malevolence that mirrors the seemingly random tragedies that befall this family.

I wish I could tell you more, but the plot of this movie is so tightly woven that it took me a second viewing to fully comprehend the seamless of Aster's screenplay, which is liberally sprinkled with omens and portents ranging from walnuts to Sophocles.

As good as the writing and directing are, Hereditary is driven primarily by its performances, which amount to a kind of chamber piece for five actors. Collette, already noted, should get an Oscar nomination; she's that good. But Gabriel Byrne, as Annie's long-suffering husband Steve, is certainly no slouch, and Alex Wolff as Peter, her teenaged son, and Milly Shapiro as her ethereally weird younger daughter Charlie, are compelling as well.

And a big nod to the wonderful Ann Dowd (Joan), whom you'll recognize from The Handmaid's Tale (Aunt Lydia!) as well as HBO's The Leftovers. Dowd has emerged, seemingly mid-stride, as one hell of a character actor. I hope it doesn't give too much away to say that she fulfills much the same function as Ruth Gordon did in her Oscar-winning turn as the nosy, meddlesome friend Minnie Castevet in Rosemary's Baby.

THAT OLD-TIME FEELING

Eugene's Breakers Yard revives the past with new album

Much to his chagrin, Brandon Olszewski's 12-year-old daughter likes pop country music. "I can't stand it," Olszewski tells me. "It's awful." He prefers Hank Williams. "Hank Williams sang much better songs," Olszewski claims, his eyes lighting up as he talks about all sorts of vintage styles of pop music, "and was a much better singer than a lot of these modern country people."

Olszewski plays with local old-time music revivalists Breakers Yard, so he loves all that sepia-tone sound, from Texas swing to hot club jazz — the dustier the better. Breakers Yard recently released I Don't Hurt Anymore, an album recorded in a period of personal upheaval and heart-break for Olszewski. You can tell by some of the song selections, tunes like Ferlin Husky's "I Wouldn't Treat a Dog Like You're Treating Me." Or the gently jazzy 1918 hit "After You've Gone" by Turner Layton and Henry Creamer.

But Olszewski demurs from calling it a breakup album. It's also about redemption and renewal, he says.

The lone original on the album, "Calliope Blues," is penned by Olszewski.

The record has an overall country feel, leaning toward the classic styles of Jimmie Rodgers or Gene Autry. The thrill of the chase is what Olszewski loves about recovering old forgotten classics, otherwise relegated to the spider-webbed corners of popular consciousness.

He spends a lot of down-time in what he calls "the You-Tube hole." "There's always that hunt," he says. "Can you get something that nobody knows?"

But Olszewski wasn't the only one selecting the songs for the album.

"You just play whatever you're motivated to play," he says, something he feels makes Breakers Yard so creatively successful. "There's always new material coming in. This way we all get to sing songs that we want to sing."

Considering this music's enduring appeal, Olszewski again brings up his daughter. While making breakfast, he says, he sometimes hears her singing Hank Williams.

You can see where she gets it. ■

I Don't Hurt Anymore is available at breakersyardmusic.com. Breakers Yard plays as a duo 4 pm Sunday, June 17, at Wildcraft Ciderworks; FREE, all-ages.

STRANGE TIMES, INDEED

The Crucible at Cottage Theatre is solid but dated

Arthur Miller's The Crucible is a set piece in American theater, one of those cultural landmarks of which more people know and talk than have ever actually seen or enjoyed it. We all know the story, whether we've seen it or not: Miller's gripping tale of the Salem witch trials of 1692 is really about Sen. Joseph McCarthy's anti-Communism hearings of the 1950s. Got that?

So when the play's Rev. John Hale announces, "This is a strange time, mister. No man may longer doubt the powers of the dark are gathered in monstrous attack upon this village," we know whereof he speaks. We live in our own strange times amid powers of the dark, and we are obsessed with our own 21st-century witch-hunts.

All of which is why it was necessary, if not necessarily a good idea, for Cottage Theatre to do a production in 2018 of Miller's 1953 play, which won the Tony Award for Best Play and probably helped propel the playwright into his own confrontation with the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1956.

Director Joel Ibáñez offers a straight-ahead rendition of the story, avoiding — thankfully — the temptation to lace the production with explicit references to our current political situation. The show moves right along on a simple but not terribly elegant set designed by Ibáñez and lead actor Kory Weimer, powered by the straightforward drama of its script and by the large cast's (19 named roles — no one writes plays like this anymore) overall high skill.

During the three-hour show we relish the creeping horror built by a steady drumbeat toll of the convicted and hanged.

Weimer (most recently Hyde in CT's excellent Jekyll and Hyde) shines as John Proctor, bringing an intense physical energy to the role of the hot-headed farmer who struggles to come to terms with his wife Elizabeth's (played solidly by Brittany Dreier) conviction and death sentence for witchcraft.

Courtney Roberts, back on stage after a three-year absence, is outstanding as Abigail Williams, the sultry housemaid whose previous affair with Proctor complicates his and Elizabeth's ability to fight the charges against her and the resulting charges against him.

In the end, though, Miller's play may have been outstanding in 1953, but it feels a little stale today. The issues are too crisp and easy here, and nothing in The Crucible addresses the deeper questions around popular delusions, whether witchcraft in the 17th century or satanic ritual abuse in the 1980s. How do otherwise decent people so easily succumb to inane cruelty?

AISLYN MORRILL AND KYLE CARILLO-
ENDERS IN THE CRUCIBLE

Yes, Miller sketches out how popular fear is exploited by people with private motives, whether financial gain or personal vengeance.

The most nuanced character in the show is the Rev. Hale, well played here by James Scoggins. Hale has been dispatched to Salem as an investigator, and arrives in town a true believer; by the time the play wraps up, he is desperately trying to get imprisoned women and men to confess to charges he knows to be false so they can avoid the gallows.

But, for the most part, the people of The Crucible come across as either villain or victim, and the world and its delusions are far more complicated than that.

The Crucible continues at Cottage Theatre in Cottage Grove through June 24. Tickets are $25, $15 for 18 and under, at cottage theatre.org.

I SAW YOU

IT WAS SEVERAL WEDNESDAYS AGO at this point, but I continue to think about it. You were walking South from downtown on 13th and Willamette. It was 6pm. You had green hair and a red plaid jacket, an industrial piercing as well as plugs. I was also wearing plaid. You passed in front of my dinky little truck in the crosswalk, and we held a good second-long gaze. My goofy ass was jamming out to Bassnectar, and if I wasn't already running behind to my next destination I'm absolutely sure I would have tried to interact with you haha. You got my nod of approval though. Maybe we'll meet up for a beverage someday...perhaps start a band...

TODAY. REVISIT OF ANOTHER TIME, ONE OF MANY. Touching me in some way special. Think of you always. Your eyes. A powerful wall if you wish. Makes me want for your happiness. Tender effect on me, through and through.

YOU: 5-6 YEAR OLD BLONDE DREADIE GIRL with your dad. Me: 6 year old blonde boy with my mom and dad. We met on the lawn at the Slightly Stoopid show at Cuthbert, and I had way too much fun playing with you. Hoping to connect so we can be forever friends!

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): My Aries acquaintance Tatiana decided to eliminate sugar from her diet. She drew up a plan to avoid it completely for 30 days, hoping to permanently break its hold over her. I was surprised to learn that she began the project by making a Dessert Altar in her bedroom, where she placed a chocolate cake and five kinds of candy. She testified that it compelled her willpower to work even harder and become even stronger than if she had excluded all sweet treats from her sight. Do you think this strenuous trick might work for you as you battle your own personal equivalent of a sugar addiction? If not, devise an equally potent strategy. You're on the verge of forever escaping a temptation that's no good for you. Or you're close to vanquishing an influence that has undermined you. Or both.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You have caressed and finessed The Problem. You have tickled and teased and tinkered with it. Now I suggest you let it alone for a while. Give it breathing room. Allow it to evolve under the influence of the tweaks you have instigated. Although you may need to return and do further work in a few weeks, my guess is that The Problem's knots are now destined to metamorphose into seeds. The awkwardness you massaged with your love and care will eventually yield a useful magic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Whether you love what you love or live in divided ceaseless revolt against it, what you love is your fate." Gemini poet Frank Bidart wrote that in his poem "Guilty of Dust," and now I offer it to you. Why? Because it's an excellent time to be honest with yourself as you identify whom and what you love. It's also a favorable phase to assess whether you are in any sense at odds with whom and what you love; and if you find you are, to figure out how to be in more harmonic alignment with whom and what you love. Finally, dear Gemini, now is a key moment to vividly register the fact that the story of your life in the coming years will pivot around your relationship with whom and what you love.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Congratulations on the work you've done to cleanse the psychic toxins from your soul, Cancerian. I love how brave you've been as you've jettisoned outworn shacks, inadequate theories, and irrelevant worries. It makes my heart sing to have seen you summon the self-respect necessary to stick up for your dreams in the face of so many confusing signals. I do feel a tinge of sadness that your heroism hasn't been better appreciated by those around you. Is there anything you can do to compensate? Like maybe intensify the appreciation you give yourself?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): I hope you're reaching the final stages of your year-long project to make yourself as solid and steady as possible. I trust you have been building a stable foundation that will serve you well for at least the next five years. I pray you have been creating a rich sense of community and establishing vital new traditions and surrounding yourself with environments that bring out the best in you. If there's any more work to be done in these sacred tasks, intensify your efforts in the coming weeks. If you're behind schedule, please make up for lost time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): "Necessity is the mother of invention," says an old proverb. In other words, when your need for some correction or improvement becomes overwhelming, you may be driven to get creative. Engineer Allen Dale put a different spin on the issue. He said that "if necessity is the mother of invention, then laziness is the father." Sci-fi writer Robert Heinlein agreed, asserting that "progress is made by lazy men looking for easier ways to do things." I'm not sure if necessity or laziness will be your motivation, Virgo, but I suspect that the coming weeks could be a golden age of invention for you. What practical innovations might you launch? What useful improvements can you finagle? (P.S. Philosopher Alfred North Whitehead attributed the primary drive for innovative ideas and gizmos to "pleasurable intellectual curiosity.")

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Would you have turned out wiser and wealthier if you had dropped out of school in third grade? Would it have been better to apprentice yourself to a family of wolves or coyotes rather than trusting your educational fate to institutions whose job it was to acclimate you to society's madness? I'm happy to let you know that you're entering a phase when you'll find it easier than usual to unlearn any old conditioning that might be suppressing your ability to fulfill your rich potentials. I urge you to seek out opportunities to unleash your skills and enhance your intelligence.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The temptation to overdramatize is strong. Going through with a splashy but messy conclusion may have a perverse appeal. But why not wrap things up with an elegant whisper instead of a garish bang? Rather than impressing everyone with how amazingly complicated your crazy life is, why not quietly lay the foundations for a low-key resolution that will set the stage for a productive sequel? Taking the latter route will be much easier on your karma, and in my opinion will make for just as interesting a story.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Each of us harbors rough, vulnerable, controversial, or unhoneed facets of our identity. And every one of us periodically reaches turning points when it becomes problematic to keep those qualities buried or immature. We need to make them more visible and develop their potential. I suspect you have arrived at such a turning point. So on behalf of the cosmos, I hereby invite you to enjoy a period of ripening and self-revelation. And I do mean "enjoy." Find a way to have fun.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): For the next two-plus weeks, an unusual rule will be in effect: The more you lose, the more you gain. That means you will have an aptitude for eliminating hassles, banishing stress, and shedding defense mechanisms. You'll be able to purge emotional congestion that has been preventing clarity. You'll have good intuitions about how to separate yourself from influences that have made you weak or angry. I'm excited for you, Capricorn! A load of old, moldy karma could dissolve and disperse in what seems like a twinkling. If all goes well, you'll be traveling much lighter by July 1.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): I suggest you avoid starting a flirtatious correspondence with a convict who'll be in jail for another 28 years. OK? And don't snack on fugu, the Japanese delicacy that can poison you if the cook isn't careful about preparing it. Please? And don't participate in a séance where the medium summons the spirits of psychotic ancestors or diabolical celebrities with whom you imagine it might be interesting to converse. Got that? I understand you might be in the mood for high adventure and out-of-the-ordinary escapades. And that will be fine and healthy as long as you also exert a modicum of caution and discernment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): I suggest that you pat yourself on the back with both hands as you sing your own praises and admire your own willful beauty in three mirrors simultaneously. You have won stirring victories over not just your own personal version of the devil, but also over your own inertia and sadness. From what I can determine, you have corralled what remains of the forces of darkness into a comfy holding cell, sealing off those forces from your future. They won't bother you for a very long time, maybe never again. Right now you would benefit from a sabbatical -- a vacation from all this high-powered character-building. May I suggest you pay a restorative visit to the Land of Sweet Nonsense?

Meet Spot! He is one sweet boy with lots of love to share. He's a little over 1 year old and is still learning how to be the best pup possible, while working on his manners. He has a great personality. One of his favorite things to do is to play soccer. He has a lot of energy and is very friendly. Spot would do best with an active family who can take him for walks and play with him, ideally in a home with older children. If you'd like to help this special dog enjoy a good life, come over and meet him -- he may be just the one for you! He's lived with a dog and a cat but would need to meet any furry housemates, as is the case with most animals. He's 76 lbs of pure dog and will make a good companion for that special someone. If you'd like to meet or learn more about Spot from our expert adoption staff, please visit First Avenue Shelter today.

SAVAGE LOVE

RETROACTIVE BLESSINGS
BY DAN SAVAGE

Without snooping, I came across texts between my wife "Mary" and a guy "Jeremy" of a very sexual nature. While I would be okay if she were doing this and I knew about it, this has been going on since before we met. (We've been together 10 years.) She says she has never met him in person (despite communicating with him for more than a decade!) and this was the only thing she was doing that she thought would have been out of bounds. Again, if I had known, it would have been fine. I'm not okay with her being with other guys, but I know harmless flirting can be a release. Still, I have issues with anxiety and depression, and this is definitely triggering me. I do not want to snoop and I want to trust her, but I am having a hard time with both. Prior to this, it never occurred to me that Mary would do anything that had a whiff of dishonesty about it. But her having kept this from me for as long as I have known her has made me question that. I don't want to keep bringing this up to her, but I am struggling with it. What do you think I should do?

Upset In The Midwest

I think you should get over it, UTM.

Easier said than done, I realize, particularly with the twin burdens of anxiety and depression. But if you would have been fine with this had you known—if there was no reason for Mary to hide this LTR-of-sorts from you—the best way to prove that to her is by giving it your retroactive blessing.

You're right, UTM: Mary shouldn't have hidden this from you. But she assumed—incorrectly, as it turned out—you would have a problem with those texts. It was a reasonable assumption on her part, since swapping flirty texts with a stranger is regarded as "out of bounds" by most. While this makes Mary's failure to disclose look a little worse, we live in a culture that defines absolutely everything as cheating—don't get me started on the idiocy that is "micro-infidelities" and the idiots pushing that toxic concept—and as a consequence, people not only lack perspective (oh, to live in a world where everyone regarded harmless flirtation as no big deal!) but also the language to honestly discuss our need for a little harmless erotic affirmation from someone who isn't obligated to find us attractive, i.e., not a spouse or partner.

Put yourself in Mary's shoes for a moment. When should she have told you about Jeremy? What would you have done if on the third or fourth date, she looked up from her menu and said, "I've been swapping flirty texts with this guy for, oh, the last several years. I have no interest in him in real life, we've actually never even met in person, but I enjoy his texts and would like to keep swapping texts with him. I hope that's not a problem." You would have dumped her on the spot, right? She didn't want to stop, she didn't know how to talk about it, she hesitated, and... a decade went by.

If there's nothing else—if no other shoes drop—give this your retroactive blessing.

I have an unusual situation. I met a girl I am crazy about. She didn't really have any interest in me except for the occasional drink; she just wanted to be friends. A few months later, I saw her at a bar. We drank a bit more than we could handle and slept together, and I thought we would start dating. A few weeks went by, and she always had an excuse as to why we couldn't hang out. Then one night, she texted to say she wanted to see me, but I could tell she was tipsy. We went out for a few more drinks and then slept together again. A week later, the same thing happened. When I contact her during the day, she never seems interested. But I run over like a starved dog when she calls at night. (Sadly, due to stress and overwork, I usually can't get hard when I go over. That's become a big issue.) She's very attractive, and I'm surprised she has any interest in me at all, but it's only when she's drunk. Besides her looks, I'm attracted by her personality and intelligence. I don't know what attracts her to me except maybe I'm her booty call, but recently I have been terrible at it. The last time we hooked up, she told me she's quitting drinking. Maybe she won't contact me anymore. My question: Is it worth pursuing this if I get my ED situation fixed? Or should I just move on and if she does contact me one night, I just say, "Sorry, not interested"? It's obvious she's using me. But we actually have good conversations despite us both being drunk and it kinda seems like a date of some sort. What do you think?

Summoned With A Text

She's interested in you for only one thing (sex) and at only one time (when she's drunk, horny, and out of other options)... and she can summon you with a single drunken late-night text. It's actually not an unusual situation, SWAT—millions of people have received similar summonses. So long as the summoned person doesn't want anything more than sex from the person issuing the summons, Yahtzee: Everybody gets laid, nobody gets hurt. But if the person being summoned wants more—if the summoonee has unrequited feelings for the summoner—the summoned person is going to get hurt. Because what the summoner is essentially saying is this: "I want sex; I don't want you." Even if the sex is good, the rejection that comes bundled in that summons stings and the hurt grows over time.

So, yeah, stop answering that drunk girl's summonses. Let her know you want more than sex, and if she's not interested in something more, you're not interested in her. As for those erectile issues, SWAT, try having sex sober, earlier in the evening, and with someone who doesn't regard your dick as a consolation prize. I bet they clear right up.

I am a transgender man, and my girlfriend is a transgender woman, and we have hit a plateau. Intimate time is rare, communication is minimal, and although I care for her deeply, I do not like her as a person and no longer want to get married. I have considered asking if we could open up the relationship, but I doubt that is the solution. How does one end a long-term relationship?

Help Relationship Transition

Whatever you do, HRT, please—please—don't ask to open up your relationship when what you really want is out. A lot of people who want out do this, and it's why so many people believe all requests to open a relationship are a sign the relationship is doomed. People who want out but ask for open inevitably get out in the end. People who want open and ask for open and get it tend to stay. But since most couples in open relationships aren't public about it (most are more comfortable being perceived as monogamous), people hear about the insincere requests that preceded a breakup and conclude all requests are insincere.

Anyway, HRT, how does one end a long-term relationship? One uses one's words. If "I love you" are the three magic words, then "I'm leaving you" are the three tragic words. Seeing as intimacy is rare and communication is minimal, it shouldn't come as a shock to your soon-to-be-ex fiancée.
